Customer Reviews

A provocative collection of stories by science fiction's finest, including Samuel R. Delany, Kate Wilhelm, Harlan Ellison, Ursula K. LeGuin, and many others. Accompanying each story is an eloquent critical essay in which the writer discusses one particular aspect of his or her story. This classic is an invaluable book for anyone interested in the art and craft of science fiction writing.

As informative a look behind the scenes as you're ever likely to see. It's a 'must read' for aspiring science-fiction writers, and excellent for beginning writers of any kind. -- Peter Nicholls, co-editor of The Encyclopedia of Science Fiction

"Those Who Can: A Science Fiction Reader" and "Paragons: Twelve Master Science Fiction Writers Ply Their Craft" are the go to books to see how the best write, using one of their best stories, and then an essay they write about the process. A very personal look into the creative process of several award winners.

Imagine having a highly respected and skilled author sit down and tell you how she/he wrote their story. How they got the idea, or how they developed the characterisation, plot, pace etc? Well, this compilation accompanies each story with an article by the author explaining their technique. It's helpful and motivational.

A wonderful collection of short stories showing the craft of various SciFi greats with discussion. A must have for a student of writing.
