I always look for board books to purchase as gifts for children in their toddler years. This series is great not only because they are super practical to carry around but also because of the messages they give to kids. These are great ways to get the young minds to learn about good character. These are essential basics that we forget about some times. Thank you for offering such important messages to growing minds! --I LOVE these sweet inspirational rhymes for kids...and for adults too! They are easy to remember phrases that help kids remind themselves to be kind and put things into perspective. Key to life. I gave this book to my 14 year old daughter to help her get through those fun teenage moments as well! --Brilliant books for kids!! I have all three of the books these authors have written and they are wonderful! Kids learn such important lessons through perfect rhymes and fun characters and bright illustrations. I've given them to friends and family and they have been a huge hit with parent and kids! Keep these books coming Todd and Jackie Courtney! --

Jacqueline "Jackie" Courtney, was born and raised in San Jose, CA. and has spent most of her life as an elementary school teacher in the grades of kindergarten through 3rd grade. With her talents as a teacher and private tutor, specializing in the area of reading, it was a natural for Jackie to follow her passion in the creation of children's books. Todd J. Courtney was raised in San Jose, CA for most of his life. He has spent the past 25 years as a business owner/investor and during the last 5 years, he was teaching what Wallace D. Wattles calls "thinking stuff" to business offices in San Jose. During this time of teaching, while raising three kids with his wife and teaching them the same techniques, he realized his passion lies with helping our youth understand that they too can create the life they truly dream of.

My grandchildren love this book and the entire series.

Positive messages!

What a delightful series for young children! Teaching children character lessons happens primarily by modelling behavior by the adults in their life, but finding high quality products like books to add to that teaching is one of my favorite ways to teach concepts like gratitude, manners and more. As an early childhood educator one of my passions that I advocate for is early literacy. I know personally and professionally how important reading to young children is, and how they learn from repetition. That is where the Max Rhymes series is the perfect books for little ones. The rhyming that occurs is so catchy and the illustrations are fantastic. The children in my family child care program have absolutely adored these books. So much so that we have read them almost daily since I received them. The next book in this series, Max and Molly Learn Their Manners, releases this month, and I will definitely be getting it for my collection. I also love that these books come in board format, and are small in size, perfect for even the youngest of readers. They are durable and can be cleaned with a damp cloth very easily. These books are all delightful, engaging and are perfect to read with a little one snuggled in your lap as you read. These are the perfect gift idea for a new baby, birthday, baby shower gift and even Christmas gifts and would be a wonderful addition to any child care program.

What a concept! Letting kids know that they can and should be responsible for things like making their bed, picking up toys, and helping with dishes. I was drawn to this empowering little board book because my son's name is Max. But I loved the message (and the illustrations) that lets kids know they don't have to wait until a parent tells them what to do. Kids can choose on their own to "Be Responsible Like Max." And the last line of the book is a charming surprise. I'll be ordering others in the series!

In these hectic times, helping kids adjust and cope with life and given that 95% of our behavioral patterns are established by age 6, it's essential that we start molding kids from a young age. Couple this with the fact that we all experience with rudeness, road rage, bullying, angry airplane passengers, and insults to people of differing views -- it's clear we need to start early to regain our nation's values and civility. To make changes, we must teach our children, and brain science tells us that the best time to teach children is from birth to age seven -- or even in utero, since babies recognize words, sounds and feelings while in the womb. There's a new series of cute board books featuring easy-to-remember rhymes for little ones featuring Max, his little sister Molly and other adorable animal characters. Written by Todd and Jackie Courtney to create a positive belief system and positive self-image, they even call the books "self-help books for toddlers!" I checked out "Be Responsible like Max" and am loving it. I plan to gift it to a special little kid I know.

This is a delightful way for young toddlers to learn important lessons early in life. The easy to remember rhymes are fun and will be engaging for young children. Max is a very likable character and can't wait to see other books featuring Max.

If you're looking for books that teaches a lesson, Be Responsible Like Max is great. Follow Max, the cute little mouse, as he performs responsible actions. My 6yo read the book and was hooked from the beginning. He enjoyed reading the rhymes and liked comparing himself to Max -- to see how responsible he was like Max. We will be checking out the rest of the books in the series.

Brilliant books for kids!! I have all three of the books these authors have written and they are wonderful! Kids learn such important lessons through perfect rhymes and fun characters and bright illustrations. I've given them to friends and family and they have been a huge hit with parent and kids! Keep these books coming Todd and Jackie Courtney!
